If you ever find yourself saying...

- “We have a therapist who talks to students who makes threats”
- “Our district handles the more serious threats with police”
- “We have an armed SRO in the school as well as panic buttons and a fence.”
- “We don’t want to worry parents, teachers or students. It can’t happen here.”

Then this course is for you. Preventing school violence requires a team with the knowledge and authority to recognize early warning signs and intervene to keep your school community safe.

Join Jeff Solomon and Dr. Brian Van Brunt as they share with you a practical approach to the recognition and prevention of violence on K-12 school campuses. Participants will learn how to develop a violence risk mitigation plan tied to a multidisciplinary team assessment. Your instructors will share who should be on this team, how often it should meet, and best practices in documentation and developing a violence risk/threat mitigation plan.
